Grammaticalization Wikipedia

February 17th, 2019 - In historical linguistics and language change grammaticalization also known as grammatization or grammaticization is a process of language change by which words representing objects and actions i e nouns and verbs become grammatical markers affixes prepositions etc Thus it creates new function words by a process other than deriving them from existing bound inflectional

Origin of language Wikipedia

February 19th, 2019 - Approaches One can sub divide approaches to the origin of language according to some underlying assumptions Continuity theories built on the idea that language exhibits so much complexity that one cannot imagine it simply appearing from nothing in its final form therefore it must have evolved from earlier pre linguistic systems among our primate ancestors
